According to the Performing Arts Board of Trustees President Judy Hamer, she took to the internet on May 12 with a video announcement explaining the plan to postpone the production of our nearly 2021 and the intention to open an in-person production of “Heathers” in August if the governor’s reopening schedule allows.

“With a cast of 45, and a small and safe production, we didn’t think ‘Newsies’ would be a safe play to do anytime soon (for cast or audience),” Hamer explained. “We have postponed our production of ‘Newsies’ until next summer. ‘Heathers’ is a cast of about 18, and if the governor opens things up we are considering doing it in August with limited seating and many protective measures in place. The play is already cast (we auditioned in March–some in-person before the lockdown and others virtually afterwards) and they have already begun to rehearse virtually. We all know that it’s possible that this won’t be able to go forward.

The Academy Playhouse will also produce an online musical, “The Big One–Oh,” via Zoom. This gives of the young cast who were disappointed by the postponement of “Newsies” an opportunity to apply their talent in a safe, online setting. Kevin Quill and JD Williams will be creating a music setting with Sophie Friend choreographing and Katherine Hillier stage managing.

We had virtual auditions already, will be casting tomorrow, and starting to rehearse in about a week. It’s only a 20-minute play, so as a first venture, it shouldn’t be too daunting,” Hamer said. “Kevin Quill is also hosting Mad Lib Monologues and he improvises songs as people join in a chat via Facebook Live. He is also teaching an online audition monologue class and Sophie Friend is teaching a dance class for kids. We are hoping to start an acting class for kids and vocal coaching online. All of these classes are free.”

At Cape Playhouse, producer Joe Gran dy explained that while the theater has postponed its 2020 season, it will present the same line-up of productions in 2021, including a new September “Million Dollar Quartet,” which previously played Cape Playhouse stage to rave reviews, delighting audiences.

“Currently, we are hard at work figuring out how best to utilize what we have to continue as a major resource for the community,” Grandy said. “In addition to the fall free F.P. Fridays classes we are offering this spring for students at home, we also were able to use our ticketing service to provide for our local heroes Cape Cod Healthcare’s Response to COVID-19. We were overwhelmed by the outpouring of support for this drive and are now discussing ways we may be able to help local restaurants and businesses, all hit hard in this crisis.”

With a 22-acre campus at The Cape Cod Center for the Arts, Cape Playhouse representatives are working with the Cape Cod Museum of Art and Cape Cinema to build a partnership to create safe, outdoor activities in July and August, “the likes of which we have never done before,” Grandy said.

“We are hopeful these will be able to inspire and support the community, and maintain our campus as a place where memories can be made for families and friends,” Grandy went on. “And look forward to the days when we can, once again, share the power of live performance together.”

To take part in Cape Playhouse’s classes, visit www.capeplayhouse.org, or call 508-698-2444, and find more information about Cape Playhouse at capeplayhouse.com.

Both the Wellfleet Harbor Actors Theater and the Harbor Stage Company have canceled their 2020 seasons.
